Ongoing Public and Family Challenges and Practical Solutions: Best Interests of the Child in Court Proceedings

The principle that decisions affecting children must at least take account of, and in some cases must accord with, the child's best interests is well-established in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and in numerous statutes. For all that, questions of the application and interpretation of the best interests standard have arisen with some regularity before the New Zealand Court of Appeal and Supreme Court and before higher court in other jurisdictions. Difficult questions arise not only more specialised family law contexts such as care and protection and adoption, but also in wider issues such as disputed claims to medical treatment, immigration and social security decision-making and broader public law issues.
